And in the Course of the Summer Season an Original Adaptation of one of Scott's most Popular Novels will be placed before the Public.

THE "Servants' Gallery" in the Scotch theatres was done away with on account of a disturbance taking place on the occasion of the second performance of "High Life Below Stairs," at the Edinburgh Theatre. After this disturbance, the servants were not only deprived of the freedom of the play-house, but the custom of giving them "vails," which had theretofore universally prevailed in Scotland, was abolished. The gentlemen of the county of Aberdeen resolved neither to give, nor to allow their servants to receive, any money from their visitors, under the name of drink-money, card-money, &c., and instead, augmented their wages. This example was followed by the gentlemen of the county of Edinburgh, by the Faculty of Advocates, and other respectable public bodies; and the practice was utterly exploded all over Scotland.

SOME parts of Edinburgh—as is the case in most cities—are inhabited by very poor and squalid residents, if not absolutely "wicked," in the strict sense of the word. The following lines, though not true of Edinburgh as a whole, are not inapplicable to such parts as the Cowgate:—

"Cain, in disgrace with heaven, retired to Nod,
A place, undoubtedly, as far from God
As Cain could wish; which makes some think he went
As far as Scotland, ere he pitch'd his tent;
And there a city built of ancient fame,
Which he, from Eden, Edinburgh did name."
